FOIA-00333-2015	Manuchehri, Mina	All documents from 1981 to the present regarding a military operation known as "Operacion Envolvente" (Operation Encirclement). The operation occurred in the departments of San Vicente and Usulután, El Salvador and between 20-30 October 1981. We have knowledge that a massacre commonly referred to as "La Quesara Massacre" occurred during this time period. The Operation was initiated in response to the FMLN dynamiting the "Puente de Oro" bridge on 5 October 1981 and it resulted in the death of more than 500 people, including 24 children. The United States also sent in advisers in a helicopter to assess the damage to the bridge and to advise the Salvadoran government on how to quickly rebuild its replacement. We have knowledge that while the U.S. advisers were advising the Salvadoran government, they witnessed a Salvadoran pilot of the helicopter firing on unarmed civilians. This fact was reported in the media and also in a 7 November 1981 cable from U.S. Ambassador Dean Hinton. FOIA-00500-2016	Badger, Phillip	I am seeking information on two inventions by Hans Coler (perhaps Hans Kholer), a German citizen who invented a device that allegedly could derive electrical energy without chemical or mechanical source of power. This device was called the magnetromapparata and was developed in Germany in 1933 by Coler and von Unruh, with later assistance from Franz Haid with Siemens-Schukert. Coler also developed another device called the "Stromerzeuger," from which he claimed that with an input of few watts from a dry battery an output of 6 kilowatts could be obtained indefinitely. Coler referred to the energy source of his devices as "space energy" (Raumenergie). ...both American and British Intelligence groups reviewed the technology and an official report was produced. ...There is an American report that is on the order of 150 pages.
