*February 16-22, New York City

The week of February 16-22 will be observed in New York City as Black Liberation Week to make the community aware of the "grave peril facing us and to organize new common strategies for our protection," at least so said a group of black leaders at a news conference in Harlem on 23 January. The leaders were from many different political and ideological backgrounds, including the New York Urban League, the CPUSA, the New York Urban Coalition and the United Black Women's Political League. The week has also been designated as Black History Week.

Seven days of activities are being planned for Black Liberation Week.

On Monday, February 16, blacks will be asked to stay home from work or to participate in a fifteen minute work stoppage. They will be urged not to shop "downtown" department stores that day and a mass rally is intended at I. S. 201 in Harlem at 10 a.m.

Day-long activities will also be scheduled for a Black Political Prisoners' Day; a Black Children of the Struggle Day; a Tribute to Black Mothers of the Struggle Day; and on the 21st the anniversary of Malcolm X's Assassination. On the 22nd black churches will have readings of the names of blacks who have been imprisoned or killed for civil rights activities.
